Ear Falls is a community that boasts a vibrant and unique history.

Forestry, mining and Indigenous heritage have all played a part in creating the foundations of our community. These foundations are part of what has made Ear Falls the community it is today. Even now, mining, forestry and Indigenous heritage are a strong aspect of community life.

You will still see remnants of mining, the fur trade, and the railway era throughout the community.

Ear Falls Trivia

The beginning of the 17th century marked the arrival of French explorers to Northwestern Ontario and the beginning of the fur trade, with trapper's still operating lines to this day;

By 1923, the Canadian National Railway ran through the area, opening up the development of timber, fish, and mineral resources;

The construction of the dam at Ear Falls began in 1928, drowning out Upper Ear Falls. In order to retain operators for the dam, in 1937 Ontario Hydro constructed a colony at Ear Falls which became the base for our present community;

The construction of Highway 105 helped introduce tourism to the area, with hunting and fishing camps built on lakeshore sites along the highway. This industry still thrives in Ear Falls today;

Ear Falls was once known as Otahwaka Powitek to the Ojibwa people, believed to be haunted by the spirit of a giant beaver, with ears which could be seen rising & falling in the foaming water.

There have been two Hudson's Bay Posts in the area: one from 1825 to 1925 at Post Narrows, and one from 1925 to 1933 at Johnson's Point.
